A. Objective:

This course provides an opportunity to put academic classroom study of Indonesian into practice by learning the language with a focus on immersion within Indonesian culture and environment. The in-country courses are intended to supplement Indonesian by native speakers' incorporation into rigorous in-country coursework. The course employs a combination of in-vitro and in-vivo learning approaches. In the in-vitro learning stage, students are learning both the language aspects and cultural aspects in the classroom through provision of interactive and favorable learning experiences relevant to the students' needs; whilst in the in-vivo learning stage, students are interacting with local communities outside the classroom to practice what they have learnt in the classrooms and at the same time to learn about the life of Indonesian people in the real world outside the classroom.

Throughout the course students are to engage in conversation on topics based on everyday interaction by learning and practicing vocabulary related to the topics, comprehending Indonesian basic grammar and constructing basic sentences. Students will also learn about cultural aspects of Indonesia, particularly about Lombok, both macro and micro culture. Most importantly, they will interact with native speakers in order to check their ability to engage in real life situations.
